

Joseph J. Albanese Inc. Joins the Construction Safety Research Alliance as a Research Partner Member

SANTA CLARA, Calif., May 13, 2024 — Joseph J. Albanese Inc., a leading concrete and construction contractor, today announced it has joined the Construction Safety Research Alliance (CSRA), a community of industry leaders and academic experts who collaborate to create and share new safety knowledge. The group executes scientific research based on the prevention of serious injuries and fatalities.

“We are excited to welcome Joseph J. Albanese to the CSRA community. With their expertise and our shared dedication, we're poised to make significant strides in advancing the science of safety,” said Ayleen Perez, operations manager of CSRA.

“We are proud to become a CSRA Research Partner Member and are committed to participating in research projects that support CSRA’s mission to increase workplace safety,” said Phillip J. Albanese, CEO of Joseph J. Albanese Inc. “We look forward to working with the CSRA team and academic partners to find new ways to increase safety on construction jobsites.”

“Safety is one of our shared core values. With more than 600 field employees on about 100 jobsites per day, we are committed to ensuring a safe work environment that empowers us to deliver on our commitment to getting it done safely for our clients,” added John Messing, Executive Safety Director for Joseph J. Albanese Inc.

About CSRA

The rate of serious injuries and fatalities has plateaued in the construction industry for nearly 20 years. The mission of the CSRA is to assemble industry leaders and world-class researchers to conduct collaborative research that eliminates these unacceptable life-changing events. Housed in the College of Engineering and Applied Science of the University of Colorado Boulder, under the leadership of Dr. Matthew Hallowell, the CSRA has grown to more than 100 members strong since its inception in 2019.
